DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

FOR GOVERNOR,
ROBERT E. PATTISON.
FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR,
CHAUNCEY F. BLACK.
FOR SECRETARY OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS,
WILLIAM H. BARCLAY

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY TICKET.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE,
GEORGE G. DORRANCE.
FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONER,
HARRY D. WHEELER.
FOR COUNTY AUDITOR,
OTIS H. DAVIS.

SENATOR GERARD C. BROWN, the York granger, who will be remembered by many who attended the Farmers' Institute held in Wellsboro last Spring, says York gave Pattison 4,291 majority eight years ago, "and I rather guess 4,500 is the figure this year."

A BUTLER dispatch says: "It was developed at the meeting of the State Board of Agriculture in this place last Friday and Saturday that two-thirds of the members of the Board, although Republicans, are for Pattison. In conversation among themselves they reported general defections from Delamater among the farmers."

DURING Governor Pattison's administration there was a strike of workingmen, and the proprietors of the concern employing the laborers wrote to the Governor for troops to put it down. What was Governor Pattison's reply? It was this: "Pay your own fair wages and they won't strike." It was the expression of this sentiment that now makes the miners and workingmen generally so enthusiastic for the noble and courageous ex-Governor.

SENATOR QUAY is becoming more desperate every day in his anxiety to save Delamater from defeat. The word has gone out to the Republican workers in every county to trade off their entire county tickets to secure a Democratic vote for Delamater. This is not relished by the Republican nominees in the various counties, and they say they will not stand by and see themselves slashed in order to bolster up a weak candidate who has no interest in them.

DEMOCRATS, pay no attention to any side issue candidates. Vote the straight Democratic ticket—both State and county. A vote for Harry D. Wheeler for County Commissioner is a vote for an honest, efficient and courageous official. The so-called Independent-Labor ticket was placed in the field simply to defeat, if possible, men who could not be dominated in convention. Do not give these disgruntled politicians your support. Stand by the nominees of your party; they are honest, capable men, against whom nothing can be said.

THE Republican press is making the claim that the Democratic papers have inaugurated a campaign of deceit and slander. The statement is simply absurd. The Democratic papers are only publishing the charges made against the nominee of the Quay convention by the disgusted independent Republicans. It is true they are very damaging, but Delamater and his friends have not nor cannot refute them. The charges cannot be styled Democratic lies, as they are made wholly by reputable Republicans upon whom Quay has no mortgage.

EX-GOVERNOR CURTIN presided at the Pattison mass meeting held at Bellefonte last [illegible]. The Watchman narrates this incident: "Governor Curtin could not resist the temptation to say a few words commendatory of our State ticket. His remarks were all on Mr. Pattison's honesty as a public officer, and he closed with the question: 'Does anyone here know of a single spot on this man's character?' Whereupon shouts of 'No! no!' were sent up all over the house and the old Governor brought down his fist with emphasis upon the table and said 'No! not a d d one!'"

THE New York Star says: "There is such a prospect of wholesale corruption at the polls in Pennsylvania in order to elect Delamater, that the Philadelphia Times calls for the organization of a joint committee of citizens representing different political faiths to expose, prosecute and punish election frauds. It must be humiliating to Pennsylvanians to be compelled to realize that there is a situation calling for such action. That a move of this kind can, however, be contemplated in the emergency, is a wholesome sign that honest citizens are awake to the danger that threatens the cause of good government. From this comes the surety of the defeat of Quay and his Man Friday, Delamater."

EX-GOVERNOR PATTISON and Senator Delamater, the rival candidates for Governor, will be in Carlisle, Cumberland county, at the same hour to-morrow (Friday) and Chairman Kerr, of the Democratic State Committee, anxious to have both [illegible] speak from the same [illegible] the fact [illegible] Committee [illegible] Democratic [illegible]

A GOOD SHOW AND A BIG HOUSE.—Howorth's Hibernica appeared at the Opera House last night to a large and delighted audience. Mr. Howorth visits this city regularly every season and invariably plays to big business. The great secret of his success is he never disappoints an audience. His show like wine grows better each year. He is continually adding something new, yet retaining the popular and distinctive features of his show years ago. We can conscientiously recommend Mr. Howorth and his company as being gentleman and ladies in every respect, and worthy of the most liberal patronage.—Hamilton (Ohio) Times. The above reliable good show will make its appearance in Wellsboro this evening, Oct. 28th. It is a first class attraction and a company that deserves the public approval for which we can safely recommend. Secure your seats early and avoid disappointment, as I be filled on that date. Whatever may have been their local and individual preference previous to the county convention, we are assured that the Democracy of Tioga county will give Harry D. Wheeler their cordial support for County Commissioner. They recognize the fairness of his nomination and have confidence in his fidelity to Democratic principles.

I Give Thy Knight.

I am thy knight, and thou hast sent me forth
To battle with the demon of despair,
To conquer self and from its ashes bring
The phenix of my boyhood's fervid dreams.
To live the long, long years and make my life
Like to the sower as he passes by
Scattering the grain on rock and fertile field
To reap or lose as fate shall will it so.

No favor hast thou sent, no token of gold
Were lovingly and closely on their hearts
When they went forth to fareoff Palestine,
But simply for thy word that it is best.
And for the trust and message sent by thee
Do I go on to conquer in the fight
Of man the brute against the man divine.

Count me no idle dreamer; most of all
Deem [illegible] high potential
Chivalry in me nature. I am but a man
Who loves and loves, is merry and is sad,
Has known of sorrow and has tasted wine,
And looks to higher honor to reward
Than truest love to all things true and good
And pity infinite for suffering.

Here is my hand—and to the world my knee,
For as I kneel I look toward its zenith
I shall [illegible] even where I be.
But here on earth in sight of the open sea
Caught [illegible]
Full-ar[illegible]
To face [illegible]
To glory [illegible]
To be [illegible]
And strength [illegible]
To be a man because I am [illegible]

REJECTED WITH SCORN.

"Shut in?"

"If we can only make the workmen hear before they get away."

"Do you mean that if we do not we shall be imprisoned here indefinitely?"

The sudden storm raged about the high tower room in which Conrad Hammond, bachelor and clubman, and Virginia Redwood, prospective M.D. and missionary to native Hindu women, found themselves, by the crashing to of a ponderous door, unexpectedly incarcerated.

The tower belonged to an unfinished country residence, and that country resident—the ubiquitous reporter had already informed the country press that it was to be one of the finest in the country—was the property of Conrad Hammond himself.

An hour before the slanting sun that had been shining out of an unclouded August sky had become abruptly obscured, and the young man, meeting Miss Redwood in one of the long walks she was wont to take for miles outside the sleepy old historic village with her huge bloodred mastiff, had offered her the shelter of his tower during the impending storm. Great drops were already descending with an ominous accompaniment of thunder and Virginia, after a brief hesitancy, had accepted the proffered hospitality, while Hammond, who had been riding, tied his horse to a tree. And this was the result!

The tower stood on the farther side of a sweeping lawn that divided it from the house, in which the sound of workmen's hammers and saws had just ceased, and to make one's self heard from its windows in the tumult of the elements had become an impossibility. The wind which, suddenly pouring down the winding staircase that led to the tower-room, had violently flung the door, above its last step, in the lock, carried away Hammond's reiterated calls in ineffectual whispers. The lock was provisional and on the side of the stairs only. And when the entire elements dawned on the girl's horrified comprehension, the last question to her companion with a face that had grown a trifle white and rigid.

"The workmen will be back early in the morning of course," replied the latter, endeavoring to speak lightly, but pulling nervously at his mustache the while, "and we can't starve in the interim. Still"—

"Are you certain that the door cannot be broken open?" Virginia inquired, controlling herself forcibly.

"Unfortunately, I certainly cannot." He was a man of muscular build. He threw himself against the heavy plank, pushing against it with his shoulders until the veins showed on his forehead. A faint creaking of the wood was the only reward of his efforts.

"Then we must wave our handkerchiefs—make some signal" said the girl, quickly. "Surely some one must see us."

But even as she spoke she knew that any such attempt would be futile. The sound and tower were isolated to the midst of large grounds.

Evening was coming on space and they were three miles from the village. The thought of the anxiety that would be felt about her in her home added a fresh pang to her plight. She was a young woman who was exceedingly proud of her self control, of her equanimity in all eventualities, of life. But she was conscious now of a distinct sense of painful discomfort. And of all men, to be placed in such an embarrassing position with this man. With this Conrad Hammond for whom she had so very small a measure of consideration or respect, so strong a measure of contemptuous dislike. With this idle man of the world, supposed to be so irresistible to women.

Without knowing it—and, indeed, how could a young woman devoted to such lofty aims in life linger upon thoughts of her personal qualifications?

—Miss Redwood had a face most expressive of her inner soul, an eye beam most eloquent of her condition of feeling and mind. Looking at her now her companion in imprisonment said:

"I think I need not tell you how unpleasant a situation, Miss Redwood. Especially as I cannot but feel you could scarce have met with such a misfortune in the society of anyone who would be more distasteful to you."

The rain had abated and the wind was sinking, but the clouds hung threateningly low, and in these already shortening August days a glimmering greyness was beginning to invade the tower-room. A rough wooden bench ned at some time by the workmen and half covered with shavings, occupied one side of the circular room, and on it Virginia had seated herself, her fingers interlocked, her handsome young eyes (turned sternly away.
